Sentenced to death

Capital punishment was first added as a sentencing option, for California counties, in 1872. Since the latest death penalty law took effect in 1978 and as of August, 894 people have been sentenced to death, 61 of those in Orange County. Seventy-six have had their sentences reduced by the courts.

PROP. 34

some judges act as though Rose Bird is still chief justice," said John Eastman, a Prop. 34 opponent and a professor of constitutional law at Chapman University. Bird supported overturning all 64 of the capital punishment cases appealed to the Supreme Court during her tenure, which ended when voters by a 2-1 margin denied her 1986 reconfirmation.

Garden Grove's John Goodman, 73, applauded Bird's stand against capital punishment.

"I think it's wrong to say,

"If you kill somebody, we're going to kill you," said Goodman, a writer and activist. But he said the outcome of Prop. 34 rests not in the hands of those with moral beliefs on the matter, but in the Yes on 34 campaign's ability to convince voters it makes the most sense in terms of economics and efficiency.

"As always, the voters in the middle end up making the decisions in this society," he said. "People who don't have a strong belief in what's right and wrong will decide on more pragmatic grounds."
